THE PERILS OF A DIRECTORY MAN.

Scene 1.

Scene 2.

Un-Scene 3.

Podunk, May, 1874.

Mr. Andrew Boyd:—

Dear Sir:—Your name, at the opening of this letter, is the last one I shall ever attempt to write in connection with the Directory business, unless it be my own at the bottom of the page.

In making this announcement I am agitated by conflicting emotions: sadness at finding myself out of "business," jostles with joy at getting out of this particular branch. A few weeks since I was peacefully employed in domestic duties, and watching the uncertain race between the grass and the potatoes in my garden, and yet I was not happy! I became possessed of an insane desire to enter your employ, and speedily rise to the dignity of an accomplished professional in the art of Directory-making. To-day I am cured; metaphorically speaking, "I have seen the elephant."

If you blame me for deserting you, let me recount to you my recent experience. It must stir your heart to its depths, for surely you must long ago "have been there" yourself. You will remember my several days schooling in your office, in the complicated details of taking information for the Directory. Previous to that, I had been haunted by a suspicion that the Directory business would do well enough to pass away a few weeks' time; that it was a very simple profession and that what little I didn't already know about it I should pick up in an hour or two. It sounds paradoxical to say that with all my vain pretensions I knew very much less after my office experience with you, than I had supposed I did when I entered upon it. The sunshine of my self-conceit vanished beneath the clouds of your sharp examinations of the work of every one of the twenty men you employed. I recall how almost every one of them had, with me, the same exalted opinion of his own knowledge of the business, and its utter insignificance; how, as a consequence, every one of them persisted in making his own peculiar figures and letters, many of which I humbly confess to you, might appropriately adorn a tea chest; how, after your oft-repeated earnest counsel, which we oft mistook for anger, every mother's son of us could remember anything and everything but what you had said, could make a letter any way but the right way, and which I now confess was in every instance your way. I recall, also, how we often sneered at your persistent firmness; in having things right; your great love and pride in your numerous books, that they be handsome, complete, satisfactory; be all that you promised.

I know that in all your work you were conscientious to a fault, careful and particular (too much so, we thought,) in little trifles; that you spent hours far into the night, revising, overlooking, comparing, compiling, when you should have been on "downy bed of ease." I am well aware that the thousands who daily refer to your numerous Directories little dream of the brain-work, and anxiety, and debilitating excitement expended in their publication. If you ever die, (which it is possible you may,) I here contribute an epitaph:—"Worn out by overwork of mind and body, and anxiety regarding the obligations of honor."

But all this is no balm to my wounded spirit and torn clothing! Canvassing is what has driven from my heart all ambition to be a great Directory publisher like you. Yes, sir, it was canvassing, sir, and nothing else. Can a sensitive man be expected to endure it, when a woman, after being politely asked for necessary Directory information, angrily retorts, "No, we can't help beggars; go to the Poor Master!" Another one answered in astonishment, a request for her name "Give you our name? No, sir! We know what you want, you want to give it to the Tax Collector! Another time I had a door slammed in my face, with, "No! we don't want to buy anything to-day!" while a fourth yelled, "Get out of that or I'll scall' ye!" Why, Mr. Boyd, I begin to think it a direct interposition of Providence that I am alive!

Often too, the business men were not as obliging as they might have been to me—often they were a little indifferent and expressed themselves rather sharply; but then, possibly they might have been annoyed over business troubles.

To-day I have borne the last feather, and it came very near breaking my back, I learned when I went to a country school, that "the dog is a noble animal." So he is, perhaps; but one of his noblest acts is not attacking an unprotected Directory canvasser in the rear! That is what he did to me to-day, and my feelings and my clothing are too much lacerated to admit of further details, in the absence of which I send you a sketch of the whole business.

Farewell! I can write no more; I have been put in "my little bed. I tender you my resignation at once; you are welcome to "my back pay." Let those who complain of errors in a Directory, try canvassing for it, if only for one day and they will learn that to err is human, and how sublime a thing it is to forgive.

C. A. N. VASSER.

NEWPORT.

NEWPORT is confessedly the most elegant, refined and charming of all American watering places. Its natural advantages are so many, so varied and so surpassingly lovely, that it can safely challenge comparison with any other point upon the Atlantic coast. The eye of taste guided by the cultivated mind supplemented by great wealth, has lent a helping hand to nature, and every rod of land is beautified to the highest degree.

Villas of the richest and most ornate orders of architecture, cottages whose elegant simplicity betokens the refinement within, are each surrounded with grounds of varying extent, laid out in the most artistic manner. Lawns of emerald hue and velvety softness, decked with flowers of the richest and rarest kinds, fountains, green-houses, fruiteries—everything in fact, that art can suggest and wealth supply, is here collected to administer to the pleasure of mankind. To describe the charms which nature has lavished upon this favored spot, would require the pencil of an artist, for ocean, sky, hill and dale all combine to form a panorama of exquisite beauty.

We wonder how many of the thousands who yearly visit fair Newport, to battle with its briny waves, stroll through its charming walks and bowl along its perfect drives, know that as late as 1769 Newport outrivaled New York, in her foreign and domestic commerce. To those to whom the early status of this town is unknown, we address ourselves, happy if in reading our necessarily brief data, a curiosity is aroused which will lead to more extended study. The Indian name of Rhode Island was Aquidneck— 'The Isle of Peace," it was purchased for "twenty and three coats, thirteen hoes and two torkepes," in 1637. The first settlement was at the northern extremity of the island, where a small town called first Pocasset, then Portsmouth was laid out. So rapid was the increase of population and so obvious were the commercial advantages of the island, that it was deemed advisable to commence another settlement in a more commanding locality. The present site of Newport was chosen, and the colony moved thither in the Spring of 1639. So broad, generous and christian was the basis upon which the new colony was founded, that its fame spread far and near, attracting noble men and women from all directions. The fact that in 1767 the number of inhabitants reached 12,000, is of itself sufficient evidence to show how rapid and unexampled was the growth of the place, and bears witness also to the enterprize of the people.

Both the foreign and domestic commerce of Newport was extensive. New York, New Haven, New London, &c., depended entirely upon this market for a supply of foreign goods. One merchant alone, Mr. Aaron Lopez, employed thirty vessels. This gentleman was the first to push the whaling business as far as the Falkland Islands. Although extensive wharves extending over a mile of frontage, were built, they proved inadequate to the demands made upon them, and ships had to take their turn at unloading. Two hundred vessels were engaged in the foreign trade, and double that number in the coasting service. A regular line of packets plied between London, (Eng.,) and Newport. The shipping interest alone gave employment to twenty-two hundred men. The West India trade was immense, as can be inferred from the statement that Newport had in full operation thirty distilleries : cooperies, brass foundries, manufactories of sperm oil and candles, sugar refineries, breweries, rope walks, &c., made the busy hum of prosperity to sound through the narrow streets of Newport from early morn to dewy eve. All went well with the prosperous burg until the dread tocsin of war sounded throughout the land. The Revolution was to Newport almost destruction. The British held possession throughout the struggle, and when forced to leave it (1779) in order to protect New York, they left behind them a ruined and desolated people. It would be impossible to detail the outrages perpetrated ;—the noble forest trees were cut down, the wharves were burnt, the wells filled to the brim with stones, the churches desecrated, and nine hundred buildings, besides a large number of immense warehouses, burned to the ground, and the town records carried off. All these misfortunes, coupled with the complete paralysis which had prostrated the shipping trade, crushed out the spirit of enterprise for which the inhabitants had become famed. The population had been, through the vicissitudes of war reduced to 4,000. Although efforts were made by the brave ones still remaining to infuse the old time spirit into the humbled people, they had become so discouraged they could do naught but sit supinely while the trade they had built passed into other hands.

The dreams relative to the future wealth and greatness of Newport indulged in by the early settlers of the beautiful town are realized, but in a way little thought of by them,—instead of crowded wharves and teeming warehouses, of bustling streets and resounding factories,—the genius of luxurious ease has there taken up her abode and called her votaries around her. These bring with them elegant tastes which require gratification, and this gratification necessitates that gold be dispensed with no niggard hand, and so the old time prosperity is returning.

The Summer idler in Newport has many sources of pleasure, among them all, none will give purer and more lasting delight than visits to the points made interesting by rich historical association. Among the many venerable buildings a glance at whose history will be found replete with interest are the ancient State House built in 1742, the Redwood Library erected in 1748. Tammany Hall Institute, Trinity Church, The Vernon Family Mansion, the Granary, "The Old Stone Mill." The various forts, the Jewish Synagogue built in 1762, Malbone's Garden, &c., &c.

Newport claims many distinguished men as her sons, among her artists. E. G. Malbone has left an imperishable fame as a miniature painter. Of him it is related, that on his application to Benjamin West for instruction, that distinguished artist said, "Sir, you can go home again, for a man who can paint such a picture as yourself, need not come to England for instruction." Gilbert Stuart whose fame is world-wide, was also a native of Newport, although some have stated that he was born in Narragansett. Charles B. King, a well known artist, who donated many of the paintings to Redwood Library, was also a Newport man. The profession of Law, has had many distinguished advocates, among others, the names of Henry Bull, Attorney General of Newport, Daniel Updike, Wm. Channing, are familiar to all.

The writings of Halliburton, Brett, Hunter and Hooper, physicians of Newport are still extant and are considered authority. In short, the old days of Newport were indeed palmy days, for not only was she a commercial centre, but the emporium of fashion, refinement, education, and virtue as well. A true aristocracy held sway, for it was the aristocracy founded upon intellectual superiority.

A ROMANCE OF NEWPORT IN 1755.

A HUSBAND TAKEN BY PIRATES—HIS RETURN AFTER SEVEN YEARS' CAPTIVITY UPON THE EVE OF HIS WIFE'S MARRIAGE.

CHAPTER I.

HISTORY is the most exciting and interesting study we have, for it treats of the acts of men and women like ourselves, of the struggles of countries like unto those of our own. Unfortunately however, the historian is so hurried on by the pressure of great events that he is unable to note the lights and shadows which brighten or darken the lives of the masses. Were this not so, romances more startling than any conceived in the imagination of our most brilliant writers, would gem the solid pages of national history. Our Revolutionary chronicles would be particularly rich in such romances, as we well know from the many soul-stirring traditions which have descended to us.

It is to rescue one of these from oblivion that we propose to relate with due regard to veracity the exciting adventures of Samuel Cranston, Esq., of Newport, son of the Hon. Samuel Cranston, who was, in 1698, Governor of the Rhode Island colony. That the reader may have a clear idea of the Newport of 1755, we shall state that it occupied the south-western extremity of Rhode Island, that it was the centre of a large and important commerce, being possessed of a most magnificent harbor in which the navies of the world could find ample anchorage.

Upon the breaking out of the French war, (1755,) business was completely paralysed; the English held possession of the town and harbor, garrisoning the former with 8,000 English and Hessian troops, and entering at times as many as seventy-five men-of-war and transports in the latter. Of course private interests suffered severely, so much so, as to force hundreds of Newport's best citizens to seek their fortunes in foreign lands. The most promising field which offered was the West Indies; to this haven tended the steps of those active men who could not await in aimless inactivity, the ending of the wearisome war.

Samuel Cranston, our hero had gained an enviable reputation as a bold and successful merchant, now that a virtual embargo had closed the avenues of his trade, he concluded that he too, would proceed to Jamaica, with ship and crew of his own, and become for the time, a West India trader. He was a gentleman of noble descent, who had inherited the virtues of his best ancestry. Proud was he of his forefathers, but not with an ignoble pride, rather with that kind which Webster defines as "a moral and philosophical respect, which elevates the character and improves the heart."

His decision made—his good craft bought, his trusty crew shipped, there remained but one ordeal to pass and that was the separation from a young, loving and beloved wife. Although delicately reared, and accustomed to the ever present and sustaining presence of her husband, who devotedly loved her, she with that sublime self-sacrifice so characteristic of a true woman, in the hour of trial rose to be the comforter and strengthener of her husband. She did not weaken his resolves with "an unanswerable tear," but instead, smiled bravely up into his eyes and bade him "God speed." Ah! could she have read the horoscope of the future and viewed the malignant star which was to exert its baleful influence over that devoted ship, less courageous would she have been; but in wise providence the veil of the yet-to-come is securely fastened, and we catch not a glimpse of its joys, or its woes.

The days sped on, every thing that the most loving thought could suggest was done by Mr. Cranston to secure and enhance the comfort of his wife during the prospective few months of absence. At last came the hour of parting; the ship, staunch and true, rode at anchor in the offing; the sailors, in holiday garb, stood in rank to receive their master, both land and sea slept in bright tranquillity, the blue waters rose and fell in musical cadence, while the sleepy sunshine mantled the distant hills;—all seemed prophetic of a prosperous journey, and the wife lent a willing ear to the assuring whispers of Hope. The husband grew strong through her strength, and the parting so dreaded was reft of its most poignant pangs. The last farewells are spoken, the anchor is weighed and the distance rapidly increases between ship and shore.

Then came the revulsion of feeling to both husband and wife:—he, lamented that enough of this world's goods had not sufficed him,—she, wept bitter tears that she had not braved the dangers of the deep with him she loved so well. One grim phantom of which neither had spoken, now haunted the minds of each—it took semblance of a ship whose flag bore no bright-hued legend, but instead had blazoned on blackest ground grinning, ghostly skull and cross-bones. Yes,—during these troublous times piratical vessels swept the high seas in all directions, demanding tribute of small ships and making desperate effort to overmaster such as would by reason of swiftness or staunchness prove desirable additions to their fearful fleet. But the die was cast and its issue must be abided; after the first few hours of separation a partial tranquility visited the breasts of husband and wife who, although apart in form were spiritually in close communion. He consoled himself with the knowledge that it was for her dear sake that he had left her, while she felt that it was only to save him from wearying, carking inactivity that she had listened to his proposal.

The days passed rapidly by—the good ship sailed on toward her destination, naught occurring to mar the harmony of the voyage. Keenly did the watchful captain scan the horizon with his sea-glass to detect, if such there were, sign of pirate craft—but all was assuring. Alas! that such assurance should prove untrue. One day, when off the Keys of Florida, suddenly there appeared almost within gunshot range a low, black, rakish looking vessel, which to the experienced eye of the captain told only too truly its mission. Calling his brave crew about him he strove and not in vain, to imbue them with a determination to sell their lives dearly. Mr. Cranston came forward also, and with unblanched face and firm voice said: "Captain, command me as one of your men, we must all work now, our lives are the forfeit if we falter."

His bravery inspired the crew, in less time than has been occupied in this recital, the ship was put in fighting order. She kept her course without apparently noticing the swiftly approaching craft, but soon the pirate stood across her bow and a clear voice hailed the merchantman. Prompt answer was given as to where from and where bound, but to like inquiries the pirate made no reply. A short silence ensued, broken at last by a demand for the complete surrender of ship and crew to the robber chief, and as the words were uttered the black flag was run up to the mast-head. For reply the merchant captain so changed his position as to command the deck of the pirate, and no alternative being left, trumpeted back a challenge to mortal combat. Short and fierce was the fray, each party fought for life, but the Christian crew fought also for home, children, wives. But all their heroism was in vain—out numbered, they were forced to surrender to the cruel outlaws.

Then ensued a scene of butchery which defies description, all that the most refined cruelty could suggest was done to increase the agonies of the innocent victims. During these terrible moments Mr. Cranston had stood calm and immovable, thrice had a villain approached him with uplifted blade, thrice been awed by his coolness. His thoughts were far, far away; over the waters of the deep blue sea, on the gentle sloping shore of beautiful Rhode Island, there was a home which was to him a shrine, there was he now in spirit, his form only stood amid the fearful slaughter. The wretch who had thrice essayed to murder our hero, was awed by his demeanor, for it is a truth that the most brutal men are most readily impressed by high qualities, and to him it seemed miraculous that any one should be unmoved amid such demoniac outrages.

At last he of all the crew was left alive--they bade him sue for mercy, silence was the only reply he vouchsafed. By some strange fancy, the pirate chieftain flung him, (as one might toss to a cur a bone,) permission to live; that it was for sweet mercy's sake cannot be imagined, for those graceless wretches "of God and his mild attendant, Mercy knew naught." The merchantman having become the prize of the pirate ship, was made her tender, the crew being divided, each vessel was manned, and upon his own craft Mr. Cranston became a servant to the most depraved outcasts of society. It were vain to attempt to depict the sufferings of this highly cultivated and true gentleman. The terrible loneliness, the gross surroundings were crushing to a man of his refined sensibilities, and yet he was uncomplaining. He could say with Dryden—

> "Alas I have not words to tell my grief;
> To vent my sorrows would be some relief,
> Light suffering gives us leisure to complain,
> We groan, we cannot speak in greater pain."

A short run brought the pirate ships to their hiding place which was situate on one of the numerous islands which dot the southern sea. The victors were noisily welcomed and high carnival held, for the prize they brought was rich indeed, being laden with merchandise of varied and valuable character. Mr. Cranston was ordered to perform the meanest offices, and was further informed that he was never more to leave the island, but to be to his captives a slave—if any attempt at escape was made, instant death should he his portion. Calmly he received his sentence, bravely he essayed his unwonted tasks.

A. C. Titus & Co., Dealers in Carpets, Furniture, Crockery &c.

The days passed on, and the weeks became years, no avenue of escape seem to open, all that he could do was to,

"Gird his heart with silent fortitude,
To suffer, yet to hope all things."

So cheerfully did he bear his heavy burdens, so bravely did he endure the torments of his servitude, that he won even from his debased masters, a certain meed of respect and kindness. He was brought so low that he almost believed with Metastasio, that "Death was not the worst of all evils, that sometimes it is an alleviation to mortals who are worn out with suffering." But it is ever late before the brave and loving despair and our hero was both. The thoughts of the agony and woe which was consuming his darling wife nerved him to constant watchfulness, and kept him from sinking down beneath his grievous burdens. In the silent watches of the starry southern nights, he dreamed bright dreams of coming freedom; many were the plans he formed, perhaps vague in outline and impossible of execution, but yet consolatory to the exile

CHAPTER II.

Return we now to fair Newport. We left the wife sitting solitary, listening to the delusive whispers of that arrant jade Hope, who ever lures on her subjects with fairest promises. Many hours of many days did Mrs. Cranston sit in the vine embowered porch, or beside the cheerful fire, thinking of her dear husband.

"Her fancy followed him through foaming waves,
To distant shores, and she would sit and weep
At what a sailor suffers. Fancy too,
Delusive most where warmest wishes are
Would oft anticipate his glad return
And dream of transports she was not to know."

The weeks had wreathed themselves into months, the time had arrived and was past when she should have received news of him her heart held dear. Time crept on apace, no tidings came, yet this woman's loyal heart refused to listen to the whisperings of possible evil. "No," she said, "the ship bearing his letter has been driven from its course, or he is on his return voyage." Circling seasons passed, no word came of either ship or crew, still she sat in cheerless watchfulness, alone, waiting his coming. Gloomy indeed were her forebodings, but yet she clung with all a woman's strength to the hope that ere long a bright day was to dawn, which would bring home the wanderer.

Two, three, four years grouped themselves with the mighty ages passed and her terrible fear had grown into a yet more terrible certainty. That death in some form, all the more awful for being unknown, had claimed him she now believed. Through the deep valley of unspeakable grief, up to the level plain of resignation had she traveled, until Time the healer had dulled the sharp agony of her woe, and she now lived on a beautiful life, full of gracious deeds. She visited—

"The poor, the pris'ner,
The fatherless, the friendless, the widow,
Who daily owned the bounty of her hand,
And cried to Heav'n to send a blessing on her."

* * * * * * *

During these weary months Mr. Cranston had been kept a close prisoner—no chance of escape appeared—no promise of freedom was vouchsafed. Under his great trials he grew nobler, for his was a nature which suffering refines. Although performing with promptitude and cheerfulness all the harsh labors required of him, he was ever on the alert to see and grasp an opportunity to escape. At last, toward the close of the seventh year of his captivity, a great foray over the western sea was planned. Every man was pressed into service for all the ships, some four or five, were to join the chase. In a moment of confidence, doubtless born of the submissive conduct of our hero, he was left alone upon the island. Who shall attempt to portray his emotions? A sudden tightness grasped upon his throat as though it would strangle him; hope, like a subtile spirit, ran through all his veins and nerved him to do and dare all for liberty.

With wonderful calmness he made his preparations for escape—a quantity of provisions, a well-filled water can, a tiny compass. These were placed in a small boat, and then after an humble supplication for guidance and protection to Him who holdeth the waters in the hollow of His hand, our hero committed himself to the winds and waves. Once more upon the waters with the waves bounding beneath him as a steed that knows his rider, the sense of—

"Liberty like day
Broke on his soul, and like a flash from Heaven
Fired all his faculties with keenest sense."

Favoring gales wafted him gently on and for four days all went well. On the fifth a storm arose which well nigh swamped the tiny waif, but kind providence watched over the poor wanderer and shielded him from harm. The sixth day was clear and calm, but the tremendous swell of the Atlantic tossed the little craft hither and thither as though it were a toy.

Toward evening a sail appeared in view. Then did the voyager's heart beat with a mighty joy, for he felt that deliverance was near. His white flag held aloft upon a reed staff attracted the attention of the ship's look-out, and a boat was immediately lowered to reconnoitre. Within a few minutes he was on board the good ship Hercules, an English merchantman, bound for Halifax. The Captain and crew listened to his woeful tale with sympathetic hearts, and vied with each other in administering to his comfort. The Hercules made a rapid voyage. Halifax was reached in due time, and our hero having been provided with comfortable clothing and a small sum of money took passage for Boston.

Surely one might reasonably think that ills many and grievous enough had been borne by this unfortunate man, and that now the tender buds of hope might have leave to expand into full blossom, but alas, it was not to be. New trials were yet to be endured ere the perfect day was to succeed his long night of sorrow. In conversation with a resident of Newport, who chanced to be at the inn where Mr. Cranston was stopping, he learned that his wife having long since believed her husband dead was now on the eve of a second marriage. The indescribable anguish which these tidings caused him was too deep for expression. Slowly he turned away; could he have spoken, doubtless he would have exclaimed—

"No future hour can rend my heart like this, Save that which breaks it."

All his past woes paled into insignificance beside this last blow. But one ray of light beamed on his darkened way, and that came from the thought that he might reach home in time to thwart this event, which would make not only his life, but that of his dear wife, forever wretched.

We may well imagine that no delays were made. His meagre funds having become exhausted, he was forced to proceed to Newport, on foot. Poor and penniless with his heart bowed down with a night of woe inexpressible, he entered the town which he had left seven long and weary years ago, a proud and successful merchant. Newport was reached on the very day of the appointed marriage. How to approach his home was a question, but he decided to go as a medicant traveler of whom there were many in those days. With beating heart he drew near the dwelling which he had built and adorned in his early wedded years for his beloved wife, now the affianced bride of another. Oh, what depth of loneliness was his, he felt the solitude of entering his own door without a welcome. Standing within the threshold he asked with tremulous voice for food, this was readily granted him by the maids whose sympathies were aroused by the sad visage of the traveler. After a vain attempt to eat he enquired for their mistress, saying he would like very much to see her.

"Oh! that you cannot do, for this evening she is to be married," said a maid.

"But I have a message for her," urged Mr. C.

"'Tis no matter, she is now just beginning to dress for the wedding."

"Tell her then," cried Mr. C. "that I saw her former husband at 12 o'clock to-day, crossing Howland's Ferry, and further that I bring her a message from him."

This startling intelligence caused the maids to gather round the stranger and to urge him to tell them all he knew — but no -- he must see the lady herself. The message was carried to her. Not many moments elapsed ere the travel-stained stranger was ushered into the presence of Mrs. Cranston. She little realized that he who stood so humbly before her was him to whom in her early youth she had plighted her troth, and who still had power to stir the inner depths of her being, as could no other. The thought that she was to hear tidings of her long lost husband filled her heart with an intensity of feeling that defied description. Memories of the past crowded thick and fast upon her. Although the promised bride of another, the old love asserted its sway, and her heart yearned for tidings of the long absent one. Eagerly did she question the stranger and intently did she listen to his statements. He gave a brief but touching account of all that had occurred, the attack, the captivity, the escape. Soon tears of sorrow and sympathy and glowing expressions of joy at his deliverance, gave assurance to the wanderer that he was not forgotten or unbeloved.

The supreme moment came when he must discover himself to her, for time, sorrow and hardships had changed the once well known form. A moment of silence was broken by Mrs. Cranston asking,

"Where is my husband? All too long have I been separate from him. Oh, so gladly, so thankfully will he be welcomed home once more."

"He is not far away, indeed he came with me to your door."

"What! do you say he stands without? Go bring him to me, why does he tarry! but nay, I'll go to him, impatience gains upon me. Come."

"But can you not give me one moment, can you not remember me as a friend of the olden time?" and as he said this Mr. Cranston threw back the hair which fell in heavy masses over his brow. A rapid glance into the stranger's face revealed all — a well known scar across the brow told that this wanderer was her long absent love. A moment—and husband and wife were in each other's arms to be separated no more on this earth. Over the tender scene which ensued, we draw a veil, too sacred are the deepest emotions of the heart for careless eyes to view.

* * * * * * * .

It is eight o'clock in the evening; in the parlors and upon the grassy lawn are grouped parties of ladies and gentlemen in gay attire. They have gathered to witness a wedding ceremony. It is the month of June, a young moon shines softly down upon a scene of surpassing loveliness, the emerald lawn is decked with brightest flowers, the sea yet tinted with the sun's last rays seems, now like a huge mirror of burnished silver, and now like an immense opal glittering and glinting with a million varied hues. The singing birds are darting by on rapid wing, and the arrowy light of the stars is dimly seen through the depths of the blue ether. The pure incense of a thousand flowers rises toward Heaven with grateful fragrance. At a given signal the guests collect in the spacious parlors, there to await the coming of the bridal pair, all unwitting of the occurrences of the day.

A gentle rustle of silken garments is heard, the clergyman takes his position and the expected party appear—but what is this? a stranger leads the bride while Mr. Russel, the destined groom, follows alone. A sudden silence falls upon the company; a vague wonder thrills them, but ere questioning can be made the minister in a few well chosen words makes known the wonderful providence of God which has reunited husband and wife.

The scene that ensued defies description. The expressions of delight and astonishment, the congratulations that were offered the wanderer, gave him full assurance of the sincerity of the joy expressed at his return. After the joyous tumult had subsided, Mr. Russel, gracefully insisted that as the marriage ceremony was to be performed, he should claim the right to give away the bride and that as a token of his esteem, he should settle upon Mrs. Cranston the amount he had set apart for her as his wife.

Thus the tangled skein was staightened. Gladness reigned throughout the entire neighborhood, for Mr. Cranston was a gentleman beloved by all who knew him for his fine qualities of heart and mind. His return was the occasion of much rejoicing far and near, and for many years the wonderful story of his capture and escape formed the staple of conversation round the fireside of Newport Town.

Mr. Cranston was the son of the Hon. Samuel Cranston, Governor of the colony in 1698. The Hon. Thos. Cranston, the grandson of Gov. Samuel Cranston, and Abraham Redwood, married sisters.

The residence of Mr. Cranston was at 95 Thames street. Descendants of the family still reside in Newport.

Bathing Beach.

During bathing hours The Beach is the scene of the most hilarious fun and enjoyment. At the appointed hours, hundreds of ladies, gentlemen and children come arrayed in the most fanciful costumes to disport themselves in the briny waves. The air is filled with shouts of jocund laughter caused most frequently by the ludicrous mishaps which will overtake the unskillful bather. Those who do not care to share Neptune's rough embrace come in carriages, and move slowly from point to point to view and enjoy the brilliant and ever varying scene.

Bailey's Beach.

Bellevue avenue is terminated by Bailey's Beach, a resort much frequented by those who prefer enjoying the ocean away from the crowd who gather at the public bath.

Bellevue Avenue.

Every city has one street, one drive, one park, which par excellence is the street, drive, or park. Newport's favorite avenue is called Bellevue and it is well named. Every afternoon, (Fort Days' excepted,) this splendid road is filled with a continuous line of elegant equipages of all descriptions. Four and six-in-hand, dog carts, tandems, light phaetons, each and all graced by occupants arrayed in the daintiest and most exquisite of Summer toilettes, pass in rapid succession. Light laughter fills the air with sweet echoes, and merry salutations ring from carriage to carriage as they glide smoothly by. On either side, the roadway is lined with elegant villas, surrounded with grounds kept in the perfection of neatness. Naught that could possibly mar the harmony of the scene is within range of the eye, all betokens wealth, ease, happiness. Here may be met celebrities from all parts of the world, for here poets, artists, statesmen congregate to drink in the rich beauty of nature, which is lavished on this charming spot with no unsparing hand

The Ocean Drive.

By making a slight detour at the end of Bellevue avenue Ocean Drive is entered. This extends along the shore making a complete circuit of that end of the island. Here the lover of the sea may feast his fill. The drive although some six or seven miles in length never becomes wearisome, for it passes through the most romantic and charming scenery. On one side the green and fertile land beautified by the hand of man, rises in peaceful beauty, on the other the clear blue ocean comes "like a thick plumed squadron, to the shore gallantly bounding." Looking outward, Block Island is easily seen, while Point Judith and Beaver Tail are visible on a fair day. The white sails of numberless ships dot the main, for the entire coastwise commerce passes here. He must be cold and unimpressible indeed, who could return from Ocean Drive without feeling an exaltation of soul and a deepened sense of the glorious power of Him, who holdeth the sea in the hollow of his hand.

Miantinomi Hill.

This point of land being the most elevated on the island, commands a view of the bay and harbor which is unsurpassed. When the white men first settled here this hill was the stronghold of the Indian Sachem Miantunomu, who was one of the two chiefs who sold Rhode Island to the settlers for "twenty and three coats and thirteen hoes as also two torkepes." Upon it grass grown mounds still remain as evidence of the earth works of the British. Malbone Castle erected in 1744 and destroyed by fire in 1767 ; was located at the foot of this hill. This edifice was the most costly and elegant in all the colonies. The doors were of solid mahogany as was the massive circular stairway which led to the attic. The cost of the building was $100,000. The grounds surrounding it were laid out in accordance with the highest rules of the landscape gardener's art, artificial ponds filled with silver fish, shrubbery, winding walks, all combined to please the eye and gratify the taste. An elegant hospitality was dispensed which drew hither all the talented and distinguished men and women of the island. Its loss was a great misfortune to the entire community. Naught now remains but the fish ponds.

Fort Adams.

When "war's alarums" do not affright our ear, few objects are fuller of more pleasing attraction than a fort. Grim though it may be in outward seeming, there is hidden behind its frowning walls immense possibilities for most charming entertainment.

Glittering guns, perfect walks and drives, waving banners, entrancing music, dazzling uniforms of the brave soldiers, and last but not least brave soldiers themselves, rouse the enthusiasm of the coldest. Let peace apostles preach as they may, away down—

"In every heart
Are sown the sparks that kindle fiery war,
Occasion needs but fan them and they blaze."

Hence the panoply of war pleases all.

As the traveler approaches Newport from the sea his attention is attracted to the magnificent structure known as Fort Adams. This fortification is out ranked in size and importance only by Fortress Monroe. It mounts some four hundred and fifty guns and would require in case of war a garrison of three thousand men. Its cost was nearly two millions of dollars.

On two evenings of each week during the season, the gates are thrown open to the general public and a parade drill held upon the splendid parade ground which covers some eleven acres. On this occasion the line of elegant private equipages which wend their way to the Fort seems unending. They are filled with ladies clad in the richest and most charming sea-side toilettes which add not a little to the brilliancy of the scene.

The views of Newport and its environs from various points on the road to and within the Fort are unsurpassed, and are never ending sources of delight to the observing and appreciative visitor.

Lawton's Valley.

This valley is situate below Butt's Hill, famous as the place where the Americans under Sullivan and Green made a desperate stand against the British when they were driven from the island. It is a wildly picturesque spot,—a small stream glides through it, adding its charm to those of tree and rock, flower and singing bird.

Purgatory.

To the lovers of the awful, the yawning abyss of Purgatory presents itself. It is a fissure some sixty feet in depth and one hundred and sixty feet in length, running through a bluff fifty feet high. It varies in width from eight to fourteen feet, and was the result in all probability of some terrific throe in Nature when the world was young.

A Tale of Purgatory. A Heathen Maiden's Punishment.

Upon the beach at Newport is a craggy bluff whose eternal foundations are ever laved by the mighty Atlantic. Grim, black and harsh it rises, seeming to stand in mocking attitude bidding the ocean try its powers of destruction. There it has stood through the sounding ages, calm and immovable. No storm so fierce, no wave so powerful as to leave a single scar upon its terrible front. All unimpressible as it is, it has been the silent witness of many a brave and many a cruel act. It is our province to relate one which was both brave and cruel. Go with us and view this terrible place—see how far, far below us, the green waters dash and foam—hear the angry howling of Old Ocean, as in aimless fury he dashes his spraying waves against his unyielding enemy, think how fearful it would be, were one to lose their footing and fall down, down through this yawning chasm which parts the everlasting rock, into the seething waters below. Ah, you shrink back appalled, 'tis no sign of cowardice, the stoutest heart may well tremble at even the probability of so awful a fate.

A. C. Titus & Co., Successors to Clark, Titus & Co., Kitchen Furnishers, 235 Thames St.

* * * * * * * *

It is that entrancing hour just ere the setting of the sun, when the whole earth seems bathed in glory, when the trembling light plays on the far-waving foliage and tints with a yellow flush the myriad waves of ocean. Upon the higher shelf of the bluff, and within a few feet of the chasm stands two lovers, both young and passing fair. He,

"Complete in feature, and in mind
With all good grace to grace a gentleman."

Brave, honorable and pure he was a man to win the deepest love of a true woman. The maiden by his side was lithe and willowy in form, beautiful of face, but there was an expression of weakness about the mouth which would lead a keen observer to distrust her. To him she was very lovely, very winning, and yet at times when his soul was exalted by the sublimity of nature, or thrilled by the utterances of a great thinker, she had failed to sympathise with him, but he, with true manliness had made for her excuses and trusted to the dear delicious days when they would always be together to develop in her a broader sense of life. This afternoon she had been more than usually frivolous—she had prattled of trifles which jarred harshly on ears attuned to the deep, glorious influences of nature. At last young Wilbour proposed that they should descend the bluff, repair to the cove where was secured the light sail boat, and ere the glory had died out of the sky and sea go upon the broad bosom of the ocean. "Ere we go you must give me proof of the love you express for me. I'll bear allegiance to no man save he has done a bold and daring act. Come, if you love me leap this yawning abyss," cried the giddy girl. "Surely you do but jest," replied her lover. "Nay, but I do not jest, I demand the proof." "As you wish. But do you realize that the slightest miscalculation would dash me into the hungry sea, and that all our sweet dreams of a sweeter reality would be rudely dispelled." "Aye! I realize it all and I realize too, that

"None but the brave deserve the fair."

Come, do you hesitate to prove your love and your bravery? You who dwell with such rapture on the heroism of the old Greeks and Romans?" said the maiden in taunting tones. "Bravery and fool hardiness are as distinct as the poles, but I hesitate no longer." Saying this, young Wilbour with a firm tread approached the chasm, which at this point was full fourteen feet wide. Calmly surveying the fearful abyss, he measured his strength, cast one look upon the heartless girl who thus trifled with his life and then, drawing back a few feet leapt with all the grace and power of a well-trained athlete, a moment he seemed poised in mid-air, and then struck the opposite side of the rift in safety. Turning slowly he faced the foolish girl who stood smilingly waving her handkerchief, and said, "Farewell! one who values my life so lightly, can never be entrusted with its happiness." By the stern expression of his face she knew all too surely, that her folly had lost her his love. Speechless with grief and shame she went her way alone.

A Legend of the Devil's Walk, near Purgatory.

In these days when so much is told that is false, it is gratifying to have it in one's power to tell an "ower true tale." When the world was finished, his Satanic Majesty so highly appreciated the beauties of Newport beach that he selected one particular locality for his own special promenade. Strict orders were issued that no one should encroach upon his favorite ground. Here he walked in lonely grandeur night and morning, viewing with envious eye the achievements and power of the Holy One. All went well for a couple of thousand years, until one day a beautiful squaw who had watched Lucifer until she had become enamored, ventured to place herself in his pathway, trusting we doubt not to the well known weakness of his sex for pardon. But alas! that day of all others was unfortunate for his Majesty's ragout (which by the way was an especially favorite dish) had been too highly seasoned and was uneatable. Of course, manlike, he was ready to vent his anger on the first person or thing that gave him an excuse, and here was a grand opportunity. All unmindful of the virgin beauty of the lithe Pocahontas who had decked herself with the gayest feathers and the most beautifully embroidered wampum, he seized her by the long and shining braids of sloe black hair and dragged her to the water's edge, where after chopping of her head he threw her still quivering body into the sea. It is related that the appealing glances cast upon him from the dewy black eyes of the poor dissevered head so affected his Majesty (who after all has a great deal of human nature in him) that he never more walked on Newport beach.

For the benefit of those incredulous souls who question all that they do not understand, and who require proofs of any statement however rational, we refer them to the rocks themselves which bear witness to the truth of our story. There for fifty feet they will see the smooth trail made by her body when dragged along, and also they will see the deep gashes in the rock made by the Devil's tomahawk. On certain days the blood still tinges the water which lodges in these gashes.

Paradise.

After the tourist has been thrilled and awed by the sounding depths of Purgatory, then in proper sequence he passes on, into the lovely shades of Paradise. Here a quiet valley almost pastoral in its character greets the eye. Waving trees filled with singing birds, towers high above the pretty cottages which here and there dot the vale.

Paradise Lost.

A short distance on and Paradise Lost, is reached. This name is well bestowed; great masses of rock are piled in chaotic confusion, while clambering vines trail here and there as though endeavoring to hide the rude masses with their delicate drapery. The lover of nature in her wildest form will here find ample enjoyment.

Hanging Rocks.

In this vicinity are the Hanging Rocks, sometimes called Berkley's Seat, for within the shadow of these rocks, which once were so delicately poised, that a man could rock them, the wise Philosopher wrote some of his greatest works. Among others wrote his "Minute Philosopher," a series of dialogues involving most of the important topics in debate, between christians and infidels. It is a work well worth reading in this questioning age. It was here also that this exceptionally perfect man of whom Bishop Atterbury said; "So much innocence and such humility, I did not think had been the portion of any but angels, until I saw this gentlemen," wrote that wonderful prophecy of America's future greatness, the closing verse of which runs thus:

"Westward the course of empire takes its way,
The four first acts already past;
A fifth shall close the drama with the day,
Time's noblest offering is the last."

Fort Dumpling.

The island upon which this picturesque ruin is situate was once the home of Cannonicus, a brave old Indian Sachem, from whom it received its name. He was a fine specimen of the native dwellers on these fair shores, and who, by the respect and kindness he evinced toward the white settlers won their admiration and love. He died in 1649, in the fulness of years, lamented not only by his tribe but by the colonists as well.

The island commands the entrance to the outer harbor, and is hilly in nature, with bold rocks cropping out, rich both in color and form. The Fort is oval in shape and is guarded by a high wall of rocks, against which the impatient sea is ever beating in impotent rage. The date of its construction is a subject of dispute, some claiming that it was built during the French war, others that it was erected by our Revolutionary heroes. Be that as it may, its glory has departed and now instead of being filled with armed men and belching cannon—

"'Tis now the raven's bleak abode;
'Tis now the apartment of the toad;
O'er run with ruin, moss and weeds,
While, ever and anon, there falls
Huge heaps of hoary moulder'd walls."

Pleasure parties frequent the stilly shores of Conanicut and there some while away the hours in pleasant converse, others betake themselves to the boats and woo from the ocean's depths its finny inhabitants, then a delicious chowder is made and partaken of with a zest unknown to the weary denizens of the city.

Spouting Rock.

Within a short distance is the far-famed Spouting Rock or Cave, which always attracts large numbers of visitors. Great masses of rocks are piled up high above the water; beneath these is a cavern into which the sea rushes with tremendous force. An opening on the surface gives egress to the ocean, which during stormy weather, but more especially in Winter and Spring, forces its spray and waves forty and fifty feet into the air. Of course the cavern has never been viewed by mortal eyes, but standing on the rocks above, one can hear the fierce lashing of the sea as it rushes in and beats against the adamantine walls. The view of the ocean and craggy shores is nowhere finer than from the rocks which jut out into the waters at this point.

Lime Rocks.

Many a tongue has sung and is still singing paeans of praise to the brave heroine whose home is situated on this rock-bound islet. Ida Lewis, (now Mrs. Black,) has won for herself a name that pales not in the glory shed from those of Florence Nightingale, or John Howard, for she has "done what she could," bravely and nobly to save human life. Thirteen human beings have been dragged from the destroying embrace of the mighty ocean through the self-sacrificing heroism of this slender women. Thousands yearly visit her tiny home as though 'twere a holy spot, there to offer her the sweet incense of their grateful praise.

Coasters Harbor Islands.

An old poet apostrophises poverty in this unwonted strain:

"O blissful poverty!
Nature, too partial to thy lot, assigns
Health, freedom, innocence, and downy peace
Her real goods."

Surely the only way to account for this is to believe that with prophetic vision he saw "in his mind's eye," the beautiful and charmingly located Newport almshouse. The island upon which it is built was bequeathed for this use by William Coddingdon, first Governor of the Rhode Island colony. He was a man of rare purity of character and breadth of thought; he assisted in framing the body of the laws which has been the basis of the State constitution ever since. He was a warm friend of civil and religious liberty, having left Boston because of the narrowness and bigotry which there held power. The island is viewed with covetous eyes by real estate speculators, who see in it a rich harvest if it could be transformed into pleasure sites. However, it is to be hoped that the wishes of the generous giver may be held sacred, and that for all time to come, the unfortunate sons and daughters of poverty may here find a healthful and beautiful place of retreat.

Rose Island.

Away back in the olden time, a frowning fort loomed up from this gem-like island, but in the ever-changing course of things, it has become a vine-clad heap of ruins. Now it is a pleasant stopping place for the myriad sailing parties who dot the quiet waters of Narragansett Bay, all through the bright summer afternoons. On the low lying banks of Rose Island, groups are seen watching the descending sun sinking to rest amid the sea, whose million waves are toned and tinted with hues of brightest dye.

Brenton's Cove.

Newport abounds in lovely drives, but perhaps none gives more varied scenery than does that which leads to Brenton's Cove. It winds over a tract of land, every foot of which posesses an historic interest, the knowledge of which would amply repay the summer idler's study.

Brenton's Reef, which lies beyond the Cove, stretches its dangerous length a mile out into the sea. Foaming breakers give warning of the terrible rocks so near the surface, but still many bold fishermen brave the danger for the sake of the abundant harvests which reward them.

Old Chair of State.

When in 1663 the charter was proclaimed in presence of the freemen of the colony of Rhode Island, Governor Benedict Arnold sat in a noble old oaken chair "whereon was emblazoned rich and gay, proud England's arms complete." Although yet in existence

"The chair of State
No more is great,
Or glitters in the eye."

It is a valued possession of the Gould family.

The Glen.

Seven miles distant from Newport is situated the famous Glen, a spot which has for the lover of nature unfading charms.

A. C. Titus & Co., Successors to Clark, Titus & Co., Kitchen Furnishers, 235 Thames

Every season, thousands wend their way to its quiet shades and few return without expressing in glowing terms their delight at the varied and lovely character of the scenery.

In the center of the valley is a quiet pond, to the left is an old mill, whose moss-grown wheel turned by the falling waters of the brook, does not break the silence, but merely gives a sense of life. The little streamlet leaves the mill and then, in varying beauty rolls along, a line of silver 'mid a fringe of green—on—on it goes until it gives its cool hand to the sea. The glen was the original property of Joseph Cundall who was born in 1692.

Captain Cook.

In 1768 the scientists of Europe were on the qui vive, to gain full information relative to the transit of Venus which was to occur in 1769. For this purpose vessels were dispatched to various points; among others the gallant ship Endeavor, commanded by Capt. James Cook, left England for the South Seas. She had on board Sir Joseph Banks with an able corps of assistants. After her scientific mission was accomplished she was used as a whaler. During the war she put into Newport, was condemned, sold and broken up. As a relic of "ye olden time," Wm. Gilpin, Esq., lawyer on Thames street, treasures the gilded crown which once decked her stern. Joshua Sayer, Esq., also has a piece of wood some five feet in length, probably a part of her ribs of oak.

Trinity Church.

One hundred and seventy two years ago Trinity Church, now one of the oldest established churches in the country, was, thanks to the zealous labors of Sir Francis Nicholson, a new and commodious place of worship. As quaintly expressed by a chronicler of the time, it was "Handsomely finished on the outside, and the inside pewed well, but not beautiful." Being the first Episcopal church erected in Newport, it received valuable and needful aid from the mother country. Queen Anne presented a bell which still calls the faithful to prayer, and the "Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts' sent the Rev. Jas. Honyman as Missionary to the infant church; also a valuable library of the best theological works of the day, some seventy-five in number, many of which are still in the possession of of the church. In 1724 the original structure was given to the people of Norwich, and a much larger one erected at a cost of £2,000. But little change has been wrought in the building since its completion, and it is to be hoped that the hand of "modern improvement" will be long restrained from despoiling the quaint structure.

The organ was presented by Dean, afterward Bishop Berkeley, who during the years 1729-'30-'31 often occupied the pulpit. It was a handsomely finished instrument, ornamented with a gilded crown and Bishop's mitres. A few days after the British left Newport some over zealous young men despoiled the altar of its royal emblems, consisting of the King's Arms, the Lion and Unicorn. Fortunately their ardor oozed out ere they reached the organ else that too would have been mutilated.

The interior of the church is unchanged. The high square pews remain just as when left by the powdered, laced, be-ruffled dames of George's reign; the pulpit with its queer sounding board above and clerk's pew and desk below are intact. In the old fashioned grave yard round about the church the turf is heaved "in many a mouldering heap." Here—

A. C. Titus & Co., Successors to Clark, Titus & Co., Kitchen Furnishers, 235 Thames

"Each in his narrow cell forever laid,
The brave forefathers of the hamlet sleep."

All uncared for as are the crumbling grave stones, by human hands, Nature, ever kind and loving forgets not her children,—

"No! the moon is there, and smiling too!
And the sweetest song of the morning bird
Is oft in the ancient fir-tree heard:
And there you may see the hare-bell blue
Bending its light form gently, proudly."

The Redwood Library.

Newport has always numbered a large percentage of highly cultivated and refined people among her inhabitants. As far back as 1735 there was a regularly organized literary and philosophical society, the idea of which it is thought was first conceived by Dean Berkley. It had for its object the discussion "indecency and order of some useful question in divinity, morality, philosophy, history, &c." Also to collect books of permanent value, thus forming a nucleus for what might become in time a valuable library. In 1747 Abraham Redwood, Esq., gave the sum of five hundred pounds sterling for the purpose of increasing the library, on the condition that a suitable building should be erected. In the same year the society was incorporated under the name of "The Company of the Redwood Library." Steps were immediately taken to procure plans for an appropriate building. After much comparison and discussion the design offered by Mr. Harrison, the assistant architect of Blenheim House, Eng., was accepted. It is a purely Grecian structure, ornamented with Doric columns, and reflects great credit upon the taste and culture of those who selected it. The finely located lot on which it stands was the gift of Henry Collins, Esq.

In 1750 the building was completed—appropriate exercises were held and the young society started out with high hopes of its future, hopes which have been crowned with full fruition. Donations of money and books were sent from friends far and near, the King of England even contributing a right royal gift, which consisted of eighty-four volumes—seventy-two large folios and twelve octavos. Many of them have now an immense acquired value as they are out of print. Among them will be found Doom's-Day Book, Statutes of the Realm, and the Parliamentary Acts of both England and Scotland.

The name and fame of Redwood library spread abroad and contributions flowed in freely. Among those who have befriended the institution the names of Baron Hallinguer, a distinguished Paris banker, Judah Touro, Esq., and Charles B. King appear. The latter donated a large gallery of fine paintings which, when in his studio in Washington city, were much admired by the lovers of art who congregate there. Edward King, Esq.. of Newport, enriched the teeming halls with a number of pieces of statuary among which is a splendid copy in marble of the famous Dying Gladiator.

Such an institution is of invaluable aid to the student: more than one glowing tribute to their worth has been paid by grateful debtors; here is what the late Dr. W. E. Channing says of Redwood: "When I was pursuing my studies I had no professor to guide me; but I had two noble places of study—one was Redwood, now so frequented, and so useful as a public library, then so deserted, that I spent day after day, and sometimes week after week, amidst its dusty volumes, without interruption from a single visitor." Alt that is now changed, a steady stream of gleaners visit its rich fields, each bearing away rich sheaves of the garnered thought of all ages.

The Old Stone Mill.

The "stone-built wind mill." of Newport, has given rise to much learned discussion. One party writes long and exhaustive essays to prove that Norsemen, brave and hardy, visited our shores in the tenth century, and built this curious pile for a look-out over the waters of the Atlantic, and a tower of defense as well. Others flout this theory and maintain that it is as Governor Arnold said, a "wind mill," and nothing more. The appearance of this debatable structure is anything but imposing. It Is nearly 25 feet in height, its diameter on the exterior is 23 feet, on the interior 18 feet 9 inches. It is circular and supported upon eight arches resting upon thick columns, about ten feet high. The arches are 10 feet 6 inches from the ground to the highest point; the foundations are 5 feet deep. It is built of small pieces of stone held together by a very hard cement. This cement was considered quite remarkable in its character, until within a few years a gentleman has proven by analysis, that it is identical with that used in all the ancient buildings of Newport. While this fruitless questioning is vexing the brains of the antiquarian, the "old mill" stands in grim silence. Around and about it gathers the moss and lichen, vines clamber lovingly up its rough sides as though to hide the ravages of "time's effacing fingers." Until the question is solved, the active mind of man will still strive to pierce the mystery which shrouds its creation—and fancy will weave many a wondrous tale of those whose hands did fashion it.

History of the Franklin Press.

This press was built in England and was known as that of the Ramage patent. It was purchased in England in 1716 by James Franklin, who brought it to Boston, where he started the Boston News Letter, having among his employees his brother Benjamin, whose duty it was to work the press, set type and carry papers to subscribers, consequently this was the first press upon which Benjamin Franklin worked. This paper soon died out, and in 1721 James Franklin started at Boston the New England Courant, and June 14th, 1722, published an article which was considered by the General Court, libellous, and he was ordered out of the colony. He then moved to Newport where his brother John lived and which was at that time in advance of any other section of the country as regards commerce or literature. He left his paper in Boston in charge of Benjamin, and in Newport in 1733, started the Rhode Island Gazette, but it did not continue long, for James died February 14, 1734–5, aged 36 years, but the office was continued by his widow, Ann Franklin, and all the laws of the colony printed at that time bear her imprint. In 1758, James' son James, who had learned the printing trade of his uncle Benjamin, then in Philadelphia, commenced the publication of the Newport Mercury, using the same press, but he received a new font of type from England as a present from his uncle Ben. The same press was used for printing the Mercury until about 1800 when another Ramage press was purchased, but though the first press was unfit for use, it had a history and was prized too highly to allow of its being used for firewood. So it was packed away with its ink-besmeared sides, parchment tympan, stone bed, wooden platen, and smooth iron runners. The insects in time bored thousands of tiny holes in its wooden frame, and when the writer* of this first saw it thirty-three years ago, its venerable appearance coupled with its history, produced a feeling of reverence which has not abated by time. In 1850, the last of the Barber family died, who had owned the press seventy-two years, and it was not thought of much consequence what became of the "old trumpery" and the writer was advised to burn it up. In 1859, the writer bought it for twenty-five dollars and soon after sold it to John B. Murray, Esq., broker, of New York. His reasons for selling were, that he had no safe place of deposit and the purchaser (Mr. Murray) agreed to place it in a fire-proof building and not to offer it for speculation. Mr. Murray was owner of the Franklin press in the patent office at Washington, he having purchased it in England where it was used by Ben. in 1724, while working there as a journeyman printer for Watts. These two presses are the only printing presses in existence known to have been worked upon by Benjamin Franklin and John B. Murray is deserving of honor for his effort to preserve them for all future generations, for the oldest will be kept sacredly by the Massachusetts Mechanics Association of Boston, and the other by the United States Government at Washington, who have been chosen by Mr. Murray to be the custodians of these venerated relics. The Torpedo Station on Goat Island.

This island was once considered an important point, and was heavily garrisoned. The original fort erected upon it was built by the "Proceeds of the Tenth," or the King's part of the privateers captured by him. It has done honor to various parties, having borne the names of Fort Ann, Fort George and Fort Wolcott. It is now used exclusively by the Government as a station for the construction of, and experimenting with submarine projectiles. Extensive laboratories and work-shops occupy a large portion of the island, the residue being devoted to the quarters of the officers and men stationed there. That a practical as well as a theoretical knowledge of the most improved instruments of naval warfare, shall be part of the knowledge of the graduates of Annapolis, it is proposed that they each pass six months upon Goat Island experimenting. Visitors are not permitted to the island, as perfect secresy is maintained relative to experiments made and knowledge won. This, that foreign nations may not reap the fruits of our labors.

The Jewish Synagogue.

In the early days of Newport, the Jews formed a large and honorable portion of the community, many Spanish families of wealth and distinction having settled there. In 1763 the Jewish Synagogue was dedicated with great pomp and magnificence, according to the solemn ritual of the Hebrews, to the God Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. It was for many years the only place of Hebrew worship in America. Until the breaking out of the war, regular service was held weekly, but so great was the disorganization of society during those troublous times, it was found necessary to close the doors. Death and disaster scattered the faithful sons of Israel, and for the long period of sixty years, the solemn chant was unheard within the consecrated walls of the Newport Synagogue. In 1850 the long closed doors were opened and services held by an eminent Rabbi. The interest of $20,000 left for the purpose, by Abraham Touro, is devoted to keeping both building and grounds in perfect order.

The Jewish Cemetery.

This venerable ground dates back to 1677, as evidenced by a deed now in the Town Clerk's office. The substantial and costly gateway and railing was the gift of the late Judah Touro, Esq., who also left by will a fund for the purpose of keeping it and the walks and grounds in order. The trustees with a delicate sense of the beautiful, devote a portion of the generous gift to the purchase of flowers, with which the graves are at stated times decorated.

Ancient Burial Places.

The antiquarian will find a large field for research and study in the old burial grounds of Newport. Quaint inscriptions upon tombstones crumbling with age, or else moss grown and sunken, will reward his toil.

"Strange medley here.
Here the wise, the gen'rous and the true;
The just, the good, the worthless, the profane;
The supple statesman and the patriot stern," all lie in one common brotherhood.

The Channing House.

The residence of Wm. E. Channing, one of the most distinguished of Newport's sons, is still in an excellent present state of preservation. It was erected in 1720 by Jaheel Brenton. Memories of the olden time cluster thick about this venerable building; here Judge Halliburton, of Nova Scotia was born, and here Washington remained over night. Many brilliant circles have gathered about the hospitable board, for when this old house was new Newport was famed as the intellectual centre of the New World. It is now occupied by the United States Engineer Corps.

The Vernon House.

This is perhaps the best specimen of the architecture of Newport's early days, now remaining. The exact date of its erection is unknown, but it is old enough to have served as a place of entertainment for Washington. Hon. Wm. Vernon, its original owner, was the man who as President of the Eastern Navy Board, at Boston, directed his energies to the building up of a Navy to do battle with the enemy on the ocean. Every one knows the success which crowned his efforts, and of the glorious record made by the Patriot Navy. While the enemy were in possession of the island, Vernon House was occupied by British troops, not until the evacuation did it revert to its owner. Upon the arrival of the French fleet, it was offered to the galliant Count Rochambeau as general headquarters. The offer was accepted and here upon the first arrival of Washington, in 1781, in Newport, a grand entertainment was proffered him, which terminated in a splendid ball in the Vernon House.

The Ellery Family.

The descendents of William Ellery, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, stitll reside in Newport.

Mr. Ellery was a self-made man, who reached a high position in public and private estimation, through the purity of his life and the liberality of his views. He did good service in the memorable Congress of '76.

Artillery Company.

As far back as 1741 the citizens of Newport organized this company, which has been preserved intact up to date. The best members of the town were and have been its officers, and it holds an enviable position in the military world. It forms the body guard of the Governor of Rhode Island.

In the possession of the compiler of this Directory is the following original document :

NEWPORT ARTILLERY COMPANY,
3d July, 1793.

To-morrow being the Anniversary of the Independence of the United States of America, & one of the stated days for the Company to parade properly equipt agreeably to their Rules—

You are required to warn them to meet at the State House properly arm'd and accoutred as aforesaid, at or before Ten O'clock A.M., at which hour the Roll will be positively called.

FRAS. MALBONE, CAPT.

To Mr. Samuel Freebody, Jr., Clerk.

THE STATE HOUSE.

Fronting Washington Square stands the STATE HOUSE, a building which evinces much taste and judgment. It is constructed of brick, with facings and window caps of freestone. During the Revolutionary War it was used by the British and French troops consecutively as a hospital. Its interior arrangement is excellent, considering thc early date of its construction, which was 1742. In the Senate Chamber hangs a full length portrait of Washington, painted by the world renowned artist Gilbert Stuart. It was by him presented to the town, and is considered his finest work. As can easily be imagined, it is highly prized by the citizens of Newport, and coveted by those of every other city.

On the 20th July, 1776, Major John Hardy read to the sterling patriots of the time the Declaration of Independence ; fifty years later, in 1826, the same gentleman, bowed with the weight of years, appeared again on the same steps and again read to the assembled multitude the impressive document. We can well believe that the flood of recollections that pressed upon him made his voice tremble and his eye dim with unwonted emotion.

THE GRANARY, OR CITY HALL.

This building, situate at the head of Long Wharf, and facing the Parade, was erected in 1763. It is after the Ionic order of architecture, and cost £24,000, which sum was raised by a lottery. It was originally intended for a public market and granary, the records saying that "the upper part shall be divided into stores for dry goods, and all rents thereof, together with all profits be lodged in the town treasury of Newport toward a stock for purchasing grain for supplying a PUBLIC GRANARY FOREVER. The lower part shall be used as a Market House, and for no other use FOREVER." Within late years, however, the old GRANARY has been renovated, and now it is known as the City Hall.

FORT GREENE.

The original fort upon the northern extremity of Washington street was thrown up in a single night in 1776, for the purpose of shelling a British ship that lay off Rose Island. In 1798 the present fort was built by order of Congress and named in honor of Col. Greene, it having previously been called the North Battery.

THE PRESCOTT HEADQUARTERS.

At the corner of Pelham and Spring streets, still stands the fine old mansion which was occupied by the generally detested Gen. Prescott, as his headquarters. It is elaborately finished within, the panel work, moulding and stairway being particularly worthy of examination.

A. C. Titus & Co., Successors to Clark, Titus & Co., Kitchen Furnishers, 235 Thames St.

The Early Town Records.

As the reader doubtless is aware, the British when evacuating the island in 1779, did all to ruin Newport which the most develish ingenuity could suggest. Not content with burning hundreds of dwellings, destroying valuable orchards and forests, filling wells and tearing up wharves, they carried off the Registry of Deeds, Records of the Town Council, the Court of Probate, &c. The vessel on which they were placed sunk when near Hell Gate, and remained under water several hours. Upon their arrival in New York, they were placed in a ware house, all wet as they were where they were detained three years. In 1782 the Town Council of Newport, made application to Gen. Charlton, the British commander at New York, for the return of the Records. The request was granted and they were sent by flag of truce with a letter of regret, from the General expressive of his regret for the damage they had sustained. Could they have been separated and copied immediately upon their recovery, many valuable documents would have been preserved, but after three years neglect they were well nigh ruined. The compiler of this volume has in his possession the record copy of Governor Benedict Arnold's will, which was among the sunken papers. It shows the effect of water, but the writing is quite distinct.

Newport Merry-Making in 1722.

Through the courtesy of Gov. W. C. Cozzens, some years since, the writer of this, added to his valuable relics of "ye olden time," a leaf from a book, being a portion of a draught of rules and regulations which were gotten up evidently for the governance of a very gay party of the young folks of Newport. It bears evidence of having been written in or about 1722. For the amusement of our readers, we will make a short extract, leaving them to draw their own inferences.

First Baptist Church.

The Society of Baptists which worship in the Baptist Church on Spring street claims, and with a good array of evidence in support of its claim to be the first Baptist society organized in this country. Be that as it may, it traces its line clear back to 1639. The foundations of the present house of worship were laid in 1733; of course the superstructure has been very materially altered and improved. During the Revolution it, in common with all sacred edifices, suffered severely at the hands of the vandal enemy. It has numbered among its clergy some of the most brilliant lights of the church. The names of Obadiah Holmes, an Oxford graduate, Rev. John Callender, and the universally loved and revered Michael Eddy, whose pastorate extended over a period of fifty years, are familiar to all Baptists.

Lily Pond.

The largest sheet of water upon the island bears the sweet name of Lily Pond. Here,

> "Beneath the quivering shade
> Where cooling vapors breathe along the mead,
> The patient fisher takes his silent stand
> Intent, his angle trembling in his hand."

And well is he rewarded, for the cool and sparkling waters teem with delicious perch. The view from the flowery banks of the lovely Pond is pleasing in the extreme. The quiet hills, veiled in mist of tenderest blue, bound the horizon on one side, while on the other hand, the illimitable ocean stretches far, far out beyond the farthest limit of our vision.

Forty Steps.

For the convenience of those who wish to descend the cliff, which terminates Narragansett Avenue, Forty Steps have been built. From the base of this cliff a fine view is to be obtained.

Sachuest Point.

Here the fishermen most do congregate. Many are the wonderful tales related of the cunning and skill shown in capturing the blue fish and horse mackerel, the latter especially, affording fine sport to the sportsman. Rough jokes are played and laughingly received, but laid up as an account to be settled some time. Health and strength come to the visitor when spent in such life-giving exercise as fishing.

Mouldering Grave Stones.

As the visitor bowls along over the magnificent ocean drive he is alternately charmed and awed by the varying scenery. Old ocean is ever in view, and the sound of its moaning falls upon the ear in grand and harmonious measure. There are many points of interest, but none more pathetically affecting than the crumbling gravestones near Brenton's Reef, which mark the resting places of unknown sailors, whose dead bodies have been washed ashore ghastly messengers from some sad-fated vessel.

The Crewless Vessel.

One fair morning in 1750 a gallant ship was discovered with all sails set, making apparently for Easton's Beach. Much wonder was expressed by the observers that her master approached so closely to so dangerous a point. Suddenly she seemed to alter her course, and then

A. C. Titus & Co. Props. ℘ Largest House Furnising Establishment in the City.

"Majestic with her swelling sails,
The gallant ship along her watery way.
Onward drove before the treacherous wind," until she was cast high up upon the shore at the north-west corner of the beach. With hurried step the astonished spectators approached the stranded ship, from whence came no cry for help. It was but the work of a moment for the fishermen to scale her sides and stand upon her deck, where, to their surprise they saw no human being. A rapid search was made throughout the ship and a most remarkable state of things discovered. The table was set for breakfast, the kettle was boiling on the galley, a cat and dog lay in harmonious neighborhood before the fire, every rope, spar and boat (save the long-boat) was in its place. Apparently the crew had for a moment left the ship. The explorers were so overwhelmed with astonishment that they spoke not a word ; like statues they stood immovable gazing into each other's faces.

At last one more thoughtful than the rest bethought himself of the ship's papers. A hasty examination of these showed that she was a brig owned by Mr. Isaac Steele, a merchant of Newport, then due from Honduras. She was commanded by Captain Maxham, what became of him or the crew remains to this day a mystery.

The only probable conjecture ever made in regard to this singular event is, that the crew must have become terrified at the sound of the breakers, and believing their danger imminent, took to the long-boat, which was swamped, and all perished. Still it seems remarkable that the yielding sea never gave up to the waiting store a single dead body. The vessel was gotton off, brought to Godfrey Malbone's wharf and sold to Henry Collins, who changed her name to the Beach Bird, by which name she made many voyages. She was afterwards turned by the British into an armed galley.

Around Newport.

In these days of rapid communication, points eight, ten and twenty miles are merely considered suburbs, and very near ones at that. The line of steamboats that ply between Providence and Newport, sixty miles apart, make six or eight trips daily. Regular stopping places are Conanicut Park and Rocky Point.

Conanicut Park.

It comprises about five hundred acres at the extreme northern point of the island. It is owned and engineered by capitalists who spare neither money or labor to make it a desirable resort. No hotels are to be built or excursion parties encouraged. Every lot is sold with the expressed understanding that upon it is to be erected a private residence. It has all the advantages of boating, bathing, fishing and driving. If one wishes to visit Newport less than an hour's sail lands them on Bellevue avenue. It can not fail to become a most fashionable and delightful summer city.

Rocky Point.

This is the place of all others where one must go if he would partake of a genuine Rhode Island clam-bake. Whether it is the air or the clams or the cooks, we know not, but the national dish here has a gout obtainable at no other point. A fine hotel provides ample accommodation for the guests who are numbered by thousands. Daily excursion parties flock to this romantic spot on clam-bake thoughts intent.

A. C. Titus & Co., Successors to Clark, Titus & Co., Kitchen Furnishers, 235 Thames

Block Island.

This island which lies nine miles from land was discovered on the trial trip of the first decked vessel ever built in the old United States. Her builder was Adrian Block, a dutch navigator, who on the banks of the Hudson constructed the Yatch which, as above noted, was the first fruits of the ship builder's art in America. A sail to Block Island over the waters of the deep blue sea will repay the tourist, who there meets a bold, hardy, unique race of people, all untainted as yet with the follies of the outer world. A regular packet plies between this point and Newport.

Narragansett Pier.

Eight miles distant the Pier is reached by a small steamer which makes several trips daily between it and Newport. For the tourist to whom time is no object and who enjoys the beauties of Nature, the most delightful route is by steamer Ealus to Wickford, on a few miles to Kingston where stages are in waiting to convey passengers to the Pier. The stage road lies through rural villages, past picturesque farm houses, and over hill and dale clad in Nature's brightest livery. The Pier reached, exhilarating surf bathing, the finest of fishing and gunning and magnificent sea views reward the visitor.

The Stone Bridge House.

Those who love nature in her simplicity do not confine their afternoon drives to fashionable Bellevue, but extend them out into the country surrounding Newport, than which none is lovelier. The old Stone Bridge House forms a natural termination of one such drive. It is situate near the bridge which binds this island with Liverton.

NEWPORT EXOTIC GARDEN!

Where can I find it? is sometimes asked by strangers, but never by old visitors. Now is the time to secure your bedding plants. We never before had such a quantity and never such fine plants as this season, consisting of all the new and rare plants. All we desire, is to come and look and see for yourselves. Roses, Dracenias, Centaurias, Geraniums of all sorts, Carnations, Coleous, &c., all of these by the hundred or thousand. Hundreds of other varieties of bedding and foliage plants, all at low rates. Baskets, Stands, Vases, Jardinieres. A fine lot of Ferns, Begonias, Caladiums, Palms, Euphorbias, Camelias and Azalias, Rose Buds by the hundred, and everything pertaining to a first-class Horticultural Establishment. ☞All orders received this season for Boquets, Baskets, Cut Flowers, and decorations for parties and weddings, received at the garden, as we have vacated our store on Bellevue Avenue, to avoid extortionate rent, which we save by doing all our business at the Green-House and which our patrons will have the benefit of. Trees of various sorts to be found in addition to the above. CALVIN & GERAGHTY, Dearborn and Spring Streets, Newport, R. I.

"IT WORKS LIKE A CHARM."

READER:—

Many years ago, while experimenting with the different medicinal combinations of Plants, Flowers and Oils, trying to mitigate the excruciating pains of Rheumatism, I discovered a clean, delicious and safe remedy for almost all kinds of pain and inflammation. At first myself and family used it, and we also gave it to our friends and neighbors to use, and wherever it was faithfully tried we found it cured Headache, Toothache, Ague in the Face and Jaws, Lame Shoulders, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Sciatica, Sprains, Pleurisy, Contusions, Bruises, Chilblains, Sore Throat, Quinsey, Poison by Ivy, Cramps, Colic Pains, Dyspepsia, Cholera Morbus, Colds, Croup, Fits and many more of this class of "pains and aches," with which men, women and children, in our changeable climate, are more or less afflicted, and for which they need an honest remedy. I called this combination, "which works like a charm,"

RENNE'S PAIN KILLING MAGIC OIL!

A name before this, wholly unknown in Medicine, and the words "MAGIC OIL," became my "TRADE MARK," for this article, so that in law and honor, no other persons have any right to use the name.

In a short time the fame of my MAGIC OIL went abroad, and the people sent for it, and came to my house for it in large numbers, and the universal testimony was that "RENNE'S MAGIC OIL Cured all kinds of Pain as if by Magic." Of course I was pleased and this "TRADE MARK" became of great value to me, as well as to the suffering ones who needed such a remedy.

☞ HONORABLE Manufacturers of medicines can have no motive for using another person's "TRADE MARK!"

☞ HONORABLE DRUGGISTS and dealers in medicines, will not countenance such dishonorable and fraudulent things, because it not only produces confusion in business, but subjects them to the suspicion of dealing in spurious articles, and of aiding counterfeits, and other dishonorable practices!

☞ (A bad person may have a motive in stealing the "Trade Mark" belonging to another, and even for "stealing the livery of Heaven to serve the Devil in!") RENNE'S MAGIC OIL is made of the Finest and Purest Oils and Extracts known in medicine, and it is Clean, Delicious and safe to use, both externally and internally, as directed on each bottle, and the Letters and Certificates received from those who have used it, both at home and from Europe, show conclusively that it is just what is needed in every family to cure all kinds of pain and lameness, and that it is a Superior Family Medicine! Try it faithfully! The Druggist or Merchant with whom you trade, keeps it for sale, or will send for it at your request, and sell at the manufacturers' lowest prices at retail. Full directions for use accompany each bottle. It is put up in three sizes, known as "Trial Size," "Medium Size" and "Large Family Size" bottles. The largest are most profitable for the consumer to purchase. Try a bottle! Be sure and keep it in the house to use in case of accident or sudden sickness. Yours Truly, WM. RENNE.
